New evidence is at hand concerning the extent to which a "perfect lady" may drink, the evidence of an actress of prominence highly regarded by her stage associates and of excellent public stage associates and of excellent public repute. She was called as witness for her friend, the lady who is suing for divorce, and whose bibulous habits are under criticism in court, and testified that no lady can possibly live and keep out of debt on an allowance of less than $71,000 a year.

The habit of the lady in question was described by this expert witness as follows: "Before dinner, a couple of cocktails; during the meal she drank champagne; occasionally she finished up with several cordials, and before going to bed she usually had brandy and ing to bed she usually had brandy and soda." Among persons addicted to nothing stronger than tea with the nothing stronger than tea with the evening meal, or a demi tasse, this may seem an awful allowance of firewater, especially as no figures are given as to the amounts and varieties imbibed during the rest of the day. Still, so far as the facts are specified, it may be granted that it is perfectly possible for a lady to absorb moistening material to this extent during dinner and to take the B. and S. nightcap and still retain her ladylike coming material to this extent during diffuer and to take the B. and S. nightcap and still retain her ladylike composure and dignity of manner.

Ladies in general, however, are advised not to place too much reliance upon this testimony. It does not follow that any lady can imbibe copiously and variously of cocktalls, champagne, cordials and brandy fizzes simply because one lady has caught the knack by assiduous practice. Genius is more a matter of hard work and concentrated application than it is a natural gift. The art of sopping up a variety of high pressure liquids without losing mental and physical equilibrium is, like playing golf or any other game, a fine art.
